Lord

(See JEHOVAH.) In small letters and with initial capital "Lord" represents Adonai in KJV of Old Testament. In capitals "LORD" represents Jehovah, except Exo_23:17. The "LORD God", Adonai Jehovah, where it ought to be "the Lord Jehovah," and Exo_34:23. "GOD" in capitals also represents Jehovah (Gen_15:2, 'Adonay Yahweh). "God" in small letters, with initial capital, represents 'Elohiym. (See GOD.)

Jehovah

Jahaveh or Yahaveh is probably the correct form (the vowel pointing in Jehovah is derived from A-d-o-n-ay) from the substantive verb haawah (found only six times in the Bible; obsolete in Moses' time; retained in Chaldee and Syriac from a time anterior to the division of the Semitic languages), for the more modern haayah, to be; a proof of the great antiquity of the name: "I AM THAT I AM" is the key of the name (Exo_3:14), expressing unchanging Being.

Jehovah

(jeh hoh' vuh) English transliteration of Hebrew text's current reading of divine name Yahweh. Hebrew text, however, represents scribe's efforts to prevent people from pronouncing the divine name by combining consonants of Yahweh and vowels of Hebrew word adonai ("Lord") so readers would pronounce adonai rather than risk blasphemy by improperly pronouncing divine name.

JESUS: DO YOU KNOW HIM?

Jah

Condensing in one emphatic syllable all that is implied in Jahveh (or Yahweh), the true pronunciation of Jehovah (Psa_68:4); first in Exo_15:2 (Hebrew). Often in names, as Eli-jah. Only in poetry: Isa_12:2, "Jah (or Yah) Jehovah is my strength and my song"; (Isa_26:4) "in Jah (or Yah) Jehovah is the Rock of ages." The union of the two names expresses in the highest degree God's unchanging love and power. Hallelu-Jah (or Hallelu-Yah) is "Praise ye Jah (or Yah)". Psa_89:8, "O Jehovah, God of hosts, who, as Thou, is a strong Jah (or Yah)?" the emphatic concentration of the name "Jehovah." The spirit impressed with a sense of God feels the need of repeating frequently that name in which His being is comprehended (Hengstenberg).
